Psychological Psychology of Clothes Explained by a Kinesthesia Expert.

Something like "The Physiological Psychology of Glad Rage" was, in efect, the combination title of morning and afternoon lectures which were devered yesterday at the Hotel Astorabylously in the College Room, on the eighth floor of the hotel-to an audience of partly clothed clothing manufacturers and their salesmen by Prof. George Van Ness Dearborn, B. L. (Dartmouth), M. D. Calumbia), A. M. (Dear Old Harvard), ph. D. (Columbia), who wore a double breasted sack coat, low cut waistcoat, uncreased pants, a flowing Socialist candidate black tie and a single solid gold stud among the folds of his negligee

"Until about 300 years ago," began Prof. Dearborn, who had been brought all the way from Harvard to lecture to the assembled clothes salesmen largely because of the professor's researches in the shysiological psychology of the clothing business—"about 200 years ago man as a rule went around raked, especially somebody named Moe laughed heart-and there was continued laughter and applause led by a visiting clothing merchant from Detroit, another from Denver and a third from Houston, Tex., who said later that their respective names were Mr. Herman, Mr. Sidney

Some of the undergrads, led by Nathan Wachtel of Donora, Washington county, Pennsylvania, were for putting in yesterday practising up on the college yell so that they would have it down pat at the class dinner with which they as up the semester to-night. The col which was written and compo by Undergrad Al Deutsch, of Deutsch Bros., Danville, Ill., runs as follows:

College Room as the morning and after-noon sections of the lecture progressed. All men, for instance, "should be chaperoned by their wives or sweet-hearts," Prof. Dearborn, who is also an ex-professor of physiology at Tufts, said, "when buying clothes, as women are better judges of the appearance of clothing than men."

better judges of the appearance of clothing than men."

Also "it is a basic principle that man was constructed for happiness as a naked animal," according to Prof. Dearborn, who furthermore was appointed professor of the philosophy of physical education at the Sargent Normal School at Cambridge, Mass., in 1906. Furthermore, "looseness in clothes, as one finds in clothes worn by the English, has a strong appeal to me," asserted Prof. in clothes worn by the English, has a strong appeal to me," asserted Prof. Dearborn, who has been an instructor in psychology in the School of Eugenics, Boston, Mass., since 1913.

"Excuse me while I take another drink of water," was a merry wittleism (introduced solely to brighten up the solemnity of the subject) thrown off with rare humor at one point during the morning by Prof Dearborn, who has also been consulting physiologist at the Forsyth Dental Infirmary of Boston since 1913.

Anatomical Tailoring.

"And," continued Prof. Dearborn, who since 1915 has been lecturer on psychology and physiclogy in the Forsyth Dental Infirmary Post-Graduate School of Orthodontia (see "Who's Who in America"—the reporter had to), "when a tailor fits a suit of clothes he must take care to fit not only the outside bodily form but also he must fit the istomer's disphragm, heart action and his arteries." (No applause.)

"A well fitting suit of clothes tends to reduce the blood pressure of man," continued the lecturer, whose regular job, according to "Who's Who," is "Re-searcher into the relations of body and mind and in psychology and physiology, especially as related to useful efficiency."

"Now, said Prof. Dearborn, who is also a member of the Founders and Patriots of America, the Boston Au-No Celts to Take Offence.

There was no riot. There were no frish among the vestings, coatings and pantings experts present. Instead of a riot somebody named Moe laughed beautiful and the physiological psychology of classing the physiological psychology of classical psyc the physiological psychology of clothes. The public needs scientific knowledge on how to clothe itself so as to be more efficient and more happy; and for this idea I use a scientific term. 'Stheneuphoric Ratio,' composed of two Greek words, 'sthen,' meaning strength, and 'euphoric,' or happiness. You who are making notes may take that down making notes may take that down-Sthen-suphoric Ratio."

Isadore's Simple Request.

Should it be too much trouble, doc, asked a student who afterward turned out to be none other than young Isadore Blum, the phenomenally successful sales manager of Jonas Long's Sons of Scran-ton, Pa., "should it be too much trouble to stick hot ones like that with the chalk on the blackboard?"

"Not at all," replied Prof. Dearborn, who, despite the fact that he is a cor-responding member of the Institute Solvay of Brussels, is very democratic. Correct clothes make for happiness, continued Prof. Dearborn, who, it should be mentioned, is a fellow of the Ameri can Association for the Advancement of Science, "and when one is happy one is going to expend more energy than when one has a grouch—as the vulgar sometimes describe an ill natured person.

"So far no psychological laboratory
